Survey Title: Rachel Pastel's Transgendered Survey

Question: Do you have any comments about being a TGirl?

Participant #1
A desire that is always there. The level of desire varies from time to time. Purging has never been a solution. The desire always returns and seems to be more intense. I love my time a Leah Anne and my inner self seems content and happy.	8/28/2006
Participant #2
I love it, always enjoy myself when out dressed.	8/28/2006
Participant #3
I love feeling femme and transforming myself	8/28/2006
Participant #4
I would not change a thing even if I could	8/28/2006
Participant #5
I love what i do, but i wish that i was able to spend more time that way. I feel that the more time i spent dressed, the more confidant i would be, thus increasing my passability	8/28/2006
Participant #6
No matter what attire you may wear, a t-girl is a woman at heart.	8/28/2006
Participant #7
I believe I think and feel as a girl. I love to dress as a girl and feel that way. I feel 100% better when dressed as a girl and can relate to other as a girl.	8/28/2006
Participant #8
Once I accepted it, I couldn't be happier.	8/28/2006
Participant #9
The "cure" to my deep, life threatening, depression has been to allow my inner girl to come out and play. I can't be mentally healthy without it. I don't care to pass. I care to look like I need to.	8/28/2006
Participant #10
personally, I only seek acceptance/recognition of who I am and the full opportunity to live a full, complete life as a woman, a professional, friend, sister, daughter and so on and so on .. my regret is that I will never have the chance to be a natural mother and wife .. and probably will not get to be all of the other things mentioned above as fully as I would like .. we all want to be pretty but that's not what this life is about; to that extent, I have some mixed feeling about this group and its emphasis on beauty contests, skirts and dresses and the like .. all that's fine but I think it's a bit overemphasized here. One more thing: you should have included "no-op TS" as an option .. there are more than a	8/28/2006

few in that class
Participant #11
I just wish that society would accept T-girls.	8/28/2006
Participant #12
I love it. I am a collector of formal gowns (wedding, prom, bridesmaids) and enjoy wearing them all. I dress like a normal female for my age, leaning towards the business professional look, or the current trends. I wouldn't change a thing about being a T-Girl	8/28/2006
Participant #13
currently trying to share this with as much people as possible with reserves but trying slowly but surely to let my inner girl get out.	8/28/2006
Participant #14
I have come to the realization that I am a girl inside and that unfortunately I was not born when I am proud of who I am and see myself at this time as a non-op, but there are many circumstances with my life in general that do not allow for me to be dressed 24/7 and live as the woman I am.	8/28/2006
Participant #15
I am still trying to find myself and learn about the world around me.	8/28/2006
Participant #16
I think it is a blessing and makes me a more rounded person. I feel both male and female and can relate to females even in male mode. It would be great if society accepted us but there is a long way to go because of all the negative press we get.	8/28/2006
Participant #17
All I've ever wanted in this painful lonely lifetime is to be soundly whole in mind, body, spirit and soul; whether it be as a man or a woman. To be born afflicted with GID is to never know the peace in life that other normal people have been blessed with at birth. For me, there is no thrill in wearing makeup, dresses and heels. It's as natural as daily beard-shaving is to a man. This has been a 40-year long living hell for me, and a life-long crusade to become a fully congruent, happy, well-adjusted human being. - JL	8/28/2006

Participant #20
Being dressed as a woman feels natural, and very exciting, sexy, and seductive. I cannot seem to suppress it any more and find the desire to be feminine so strong that is hard to resist. I only wish that my male body was more convincing as a female.	8/28/2006
Participant #21
I have been dressing most of my life and it took a long time to accept myself. I love being a TGirl because I'm expressing my true self.	8/29/2006
Participant #22
Society doesn't understand we are not sexual deviants. We are the product of our maker. From brain wiring to a gene pool that has many varieties. My wife puts it well, You're so special, to bad the rest of the world doesn't know or understand.	8/29/2006

Participant #23
love it!	8/29/2006
Participant #24
I lived as a girl most always as a child growing up. When I left home tried to be whatthe world saw me as which only lead to a complete breakdown, after years of therapy, divorce because of it, I found that I truly am female, my heart, mind and soul knew and wanted out. Once I accepted myself and started living as who I truly am life became so complete and fulfilled. Now under medicaly supervised transisition the body is on it's way also. I have never been as happy as I am right now. I am living out in the open for all the world to see as the Woman I have always been but hid.	8/29/2006

At 56 I'm just feeling comfortable as a girl. Not quite passable but long for the day when I can go out with my other T-Friends fully dressed and not feel self-conscience because they look so much better	8/29/2006
Participant #29
Nope!	8/29/2006
Participant #30
Everyone should try it atleast once.	8/29/2006
Participant #31
I am actually planning on transiting and taking hormones but first I have to see a councillor, who has dealt with t-girls before, but she is not available until around late September, early October and I can't wait. One thing I have noticed that since I started my new job (on 21-08-06), and I have been able to attend wearing feminine attire, I have felt more confident and comfortable with myself.	8/29/2006

Been dressing for over 25 years and love it.	8/29/2006
Participant #36
I thouruhly enjoy my femininity and the freedom of feminine expression.	8/29/2006
Participant #37

I just love being a TGirl. Sure, its challenging, but its also part of me. I have accepted that I will always be part girl!	8/29/2006

I wish I could come out of the closet but am afraid to.	8/29/2006
Participant #43
Been 'out' for 10 years and I'd rather have this life than a mundane one. Being TG can make life complicated with it comes to partners.	8/29/2006
Participant #44
I like to blend in mostly alone or with non-tgirls.	8/29/2006
Participant #45
I will be glad when all the stigma regarding labels will be gone.....FAT CHANCE!!!	8/29/2006
Participant #46
I love being myself.	8/29/2006
Participant #47
i wish i could stop, but i truly enjoy it too much. it's hard, but when dressed, it's worth it.	8/29/2006
Participant #48
It's a very lonely existence. As far as keeping any kind of long term relationships. Its also the liberating at the same time. There is so much ignorance within the more intelligent segment of Socielty. Understanding the word Acceptance is paramount.	8/29/2006

T-girls, with the proper state of mind and comfort level, make the best "guys" in the world..ask my	8/29/2006 wife or my girlfriends (gg's).

Participant #53
I'M just me i can't dress rite now all the time cause i live with my mom and i have to dress when she is not around. otherwise i'd be dressed 24/7 i am moving to colorado and there i will be dressed all the time.	8/29/2006
Participant #54
Participant #55
I kinda got started late in life , but I love dressing as a girl, I think with me now it is the shock factor that I cannot believe it is actully me as also others do not believe it when they see my male photo , guess you could say lam sort of an exhibitorist, but I do love the feeling of being enfemme. Most of time I dislike truning back into a pumpkin	8/29/2006
Participant #56
It's who I am, and I'm fine with that... ;D You can't deny or hold that back, the frustration builds stress, and we KNOW that's not good.... be all that you can be... it's interesting viewing society from both sides, the power structures are so different & that in and of itself makes us stronger & able to become more loving & empathetic to all... ;))	8/29/2006

Regrding the questions on sexuality and acceptance by others; I just returned from five days en femme at a alternative lifestyle event involving gays, straights and many variations in between. To be TOTALLY accepted by almost all the attendees at that event made me realize how far we TGs can	8/29/2006 go if we just take that first step out of the closet!

i think its so unfair real women can dress like a guy without comment and we cant dress as a woman without ridicule	8/29/2006
Participant #73
I am beyond being a CD. Maybe I'm a borderline TS. I don't wear wigs or artificial nails because my real hair is long and I keep my nails a somewhat girlish length. I dress to blend in when shopping but dress attractively to TG clubs.	8/29/2006

It's an interesting side. I think it has to do with the pressures men feel with being macho in a world that expects men to be macho. When I dress, I step out of that role and can do things that would otherwise be frowned upon or which are not macho. It allows the softer side of me to come through. I've also found I can experience passion with either sex as a cd.	8/29/2006
I just love being a woman	8/29/2006
Participant #83
i just like being myself and no one can take that away from me...i love being a t-girl. melissa	8/29/2006
Participant #84
Well all I can say is that it's hard. I also think you shouldn't rush into it. You need to know what your getting into by doing some research to make sure this is what you really want. Also, dont let being a Tgirl get you down. Let people be mean just forget them. If they can't accept you for you then they are not good friends.	8/29/2006
Participant #85
It is a constant journey of self exploration-I keep growing in my own acceptance and love of self, and being ever more comfortable as Allie.	8/29/2006

My deepest need is to be able to live as the girl I truely am	8/29/2006
Participant #102
More research needs to be conducted into why we need to dress, but I'm happy and content being me.	8/29/2006
Participant #103
I love It! Just wish I was born femme though.	8/29/2006
Participant #104
i feel my career would be compromised if i were to dress in public and be recognised, not that i have an important job, but i want my work to stand for itself, uncoloured by anyone elses biases. also, i fell it to be extra difficult being a straight cd since all the stereotypes you see are gay or figures of fun.	8/29/2006
Participant #105
I never knew what this would turn into when I got serious about it 2 years ago. I feel very fem inside and the more I do this the stronger that part of me has become. I do love that side of me. I'm happy that this has happened. I think I'm a better person for it. I think my look is pretty good but always could use some improvement.My biggest concern is the isolation from mainstream society and the secrecy. It does tend to wear you down. Not sure where your going with this Rachel---but hope it helps Good Luck Rachel !	8/29/2006
Participant #106
Best sex I ever had	8/29/2006
Participant #107

I consider myself an average crossdresser with a limited ability to express myself, But when I get the chance I do a fairly good job.	8/29/2006
Participant #108
This lot in life is not an essay one.	8/29/2006
Participant #109
I often wish that I wasn't one as I know my wife would not accept me if she found out I also often wish I was more feminine so I could be 100% convincing	8/29/2006
Participant #110
I just wish society would accept us, just like any other woman!!!	8/29/2006
Participant #111
I wish I had more time to enjoy Mindy. But then, don't we all?	8/29/2006
Participant #112
I look the same whether in drag or drab. I've been out in public many many times since '95 so the novelty of it has long since worn off. I'm short so I pass pretty well and if I talk in a feminine voice can fool people but have come to realize that I don't always have the desire. Also don't mind playing the role of a male even though I look feminine. Anyway, I find myself being drawn toward the androgynes, not from mars. Not from venus. And not heading towards either.	8/29/2006
Participant #113
Enjoy the thrill and wish I could connect with more t-girls in my area as well as with admirers who are honest and will treat me as a girl/woman in all respects.	8/29/2006

My friends and I mostly go to mainstream establishments, restaurants, bars, clubs, concerts, theatre, cruises etc. We have never had any serious problems, only once that I recall re: using the ladies room, a GG complained.	8/29/2006
I love being a T Girl.....but being a GG would be the best.	8/29/2006

Participant #122
I am not a T-Girl... I am stickly a cross dresser.. Can't be a T-girl where I am working.. Work directly with Managers of Large chain (grocery) stores in Central Parts of Ohio... Gave been out on dates with gays, bi's girls and guys... Also have dated drag queens and, T-girls... Thanks....	8/29/2006

I have known from my earliest moments that I was a girl and started dressing in the neighbor girls clothing at about 4 or 5 YO. so we could play Barbies and have Tea Partys and other things we both liked most of the time other neighbor girls came over so we all did things together our mothers never stoped me from being one of the girls when we went to the beach or swimming pool I put on one of Debbies swim suites at her house befor we went.	8/29/2006

Being a Tgirl is not easy. Somehow I am supposed to conduct myself as a man, though I find my mind wandering to dressing as a girl. TGirls are still not accepted by society and it seems like such a big hurdle to over come for acceptance. As Samantha, I am looking for a supportive and caring sister who can help me be Samantha. Sort of like a big sister who can offer non-judgemental advise and help Samantha with dressing and shopping and having fun.	8/29/2006

Trying to live according to a male gender stereotype made me so miserable I just about killed myself. Now that I have accepted that I am a girl I feel much more hopeful about the future. While I won't say that I am happy yet, I feel like things are getting better every day. I had been so lonely but already I have met many other tgirls that love me as Ashley. All I ever wanted was to be loved for who I really am and now I'm meeting people who love me and I can love them. I am so excited about life and who I get to be now. Hopefully in a few years I can be presenting myself as who I really am on a full time basis and I can forget all the sadness that having the wrong genitalia brought me.	8/29/2006
Participant #150
It's scary and exhilarating and getting to normal as I do it more often.	8/29/2006
Participant #151
I find it interesting that you asked the question about purging your collections. I have purged more times than I care to count. Each time, I tell myself that I am not going to do this anymore. I do not normally venture out as a girl, but I do enjoy hanging around the house as one. For whatever reason, every once in a while I feel the need to try to "be a man" and not keep women's things around. I have tried the opposite side as well. I have attempted to force myself to deal with my cravings by destroying my male underclothing or donating it to a charity. I have a collection now that rivals my collection of male garments. Thanks so much for giving me this opportunity to speak.	8/29/2006

I would love to see T-Girls completely accepted in the world but at the same time am excited by the taboo, i guess lifes just like that. I do admire cultures that seem to make less of a judgment,Im in NZ we have a culture of extremes. we have TG MP's & mayors and even a roumerd to be gay woman Prime Minister & we have legal civil union and gay law reforms but we also have a hard core macho rugby racing & beer mentality that dont even respect real women forget tg's. that wont change overnight but it is changing slowly.	8/29/2006

Being a TGirl is both a burden and a blessing. As TGirls, we can experience a wider range of emotions and experiences than a non-transgender individual and yet, we are often not accepted by society at large. It's funny; as a TGirl, i can tell you that I have been accepted by almost every individual person I've come in contact with and rejected by an equal number of groups of people. It seems to me that most people understand us and accept us, but put on a show of rejection when with a group so as not to seem "gay". I'm not sure what TG's can do as a group to overcome this problem.	8/30/2006

Hi Hon:  I'm still waiting for society to GROW UP!  Last night, I went for a cocktail after work (11 PM). At the bar last night, I saw 2 girls dancing and touching/flirting (a straight bar) girls dressed in CAMO tank tops and jeans, and guys eyeing BOTH girls and other guys--but I felt some vague tension when I walked in.  Now keep in mind that I'm fulltime--but 6' tall--so I can't always pass--but I'm very femme in all regards, so why can others do their things when I'm just trying to find some happiness for myself? I think being a TGirl is a great thing. In my opinion if all guys were able to explore their feminine side openly there would be less divorces and break ups because it gives guys a better understanding of what girls have to do and go through. If TGirls were more openly accepted I would definitely dress more and go out more. My fem sides helps me express myself. Oh and yes I envy GG's because they DO have the best of all worlds I think!	8/31/2006

For my own part, I have never felt inherently female nor inherently male to any significant degree. My crossing of gender lines has been driven entirely by erotic desires, and is not an expression of any "either/or" traditional gender-based personality, submerged or otherwise. The impetus is purely one of erotic exploration.  Nevertheless, this exploration has given rise to indispensable insights into the prevailing "norms" of male and female behavior and drives. Even passing moments of erotic pleasure have often provided clues and questions that have ultimately made valuable contributions to my much wider exploration of individual and social psychology.  As a part of my personal journey, transcendence of conventional gender boundaries is a "gift that keeps on giving."	8/31/2006

I am part male part female, and I am always transgendered whether I'm dressed en femme or not. I'm comfortable with who I am and love who I am. I also like to express my t-ness by dressing as a woman. Can this crossdressing be separated from my transgenderism? Probably not, but I do see it as a distinct additional element to being transgendered. I firstly and foremostly identify as being transgendered in mind and soul.	9/8/2006
I do believe this is inherent in our chromosone makeup and not a choice. Ultimately society will accept tg woman as the third sex, especially given the androgynous nature of the uounger generation. I feel the most comfortable when dressed en femme. Toenails are painted nearly all the time and I don't feel quite right when they aren't. I can not pass for a woman as I have a beard, so I don't even try. I have a strong feeling the beard I have had for 30 years is about to disappear, and 2007 will be a true coming out (on several fronts). The first time I put on girl's clothes, I was 7 or 8, when I remember putting on my sister's skirt and blouse. I have dressed a few times over the years, but for the last 3 months, it is every day when I get home from work unless I had to be in public, (in which cases I sometimes go out in eye shadow and fingernail polish).	9/18/2006

Nothing stays the same. Some days, or longer, I feel so femme that I'm about to burst. Other times I've woken up and wondered just what in the hell I was doing! No sense in purging because I'm always back. But when in TGirl mode I love it with a sense of this is really the real me. You know what I mean.	10/9/2006

By far, I am happiest when "presenting" as Kelli(though in my mind I'm almost always thinking "girl"), but as I selected above, I don't dress 24/7 as of yet, so I can't truly say that that is what want to do--live as a girl fulltime. But, I have a very strong feeling I would feel just right doing that, and the more time spent as Kelli, at least visually, inside and out of the home, could only bring more confidence as time goes on, despite the possible negative feedbacks. Ok...to make this "short 'n sweet(why didn't you say this in the first place, Kell??)--Yes, I am a girl, I really always have been, and I definitely always will be! Now, it's time to prove myself. Thank you Rachel, for allowing this space to post my feelings. And thank you for the survey too. And of course, thank you for the sweet website! Take care. ((HUGS))	10/17/2006

I often wonder just "how" a "male" or a "female" is supposed to "feel." I believe, as a society, we categorize such traits as "Love, compassion, empathy, gentility," as "feminine traits"...why is that?	10/17/2006

Some recent events have helped me accept and like who I am. I came out to some of my friends and it has lifted a heavy burden of secrecy from my life, also, I accidentally outed myself on Myspace to my small hometown. That gave me some stress but in the end worked out quite well, but I consider myself lucky, there were only a few negative things that came up, but they were outnumbered by the positives. Warning, watch it if you go on Myspace, its very popular these days.	10/30/2006

It has been wonderful at times and, like some great adventure, there have been many not so wonderful times. Only recently have I begun to come out of my shell a bit(not "out" to anyone)by paying more attention to my fem side and really starting to allow into my life more of the things that will help me to become better adjusted with the idea of my fem side demanding more time and effort from me. It was not possible for me to do a lot of things when I was younger and so I am now beginning to explore myself and trying to learn more about this other person who is inside of me. The internet has helped immeasurably in this and I am happy that I am able to let my fem side have some time to be involved in things, like this survey, that help in allowing me to get closer to becoming and understanding the girl inside of me. Thanks so much, hon. Hugs, Kathy	11/2/2006

The misconceptions about the transgender community are horrible. People need to be educated about the differences. An occasional TV and a TS are no where near the same. Those who dress as a fetish are not representative of those who must transition to survive. I like your survey but how do we get real/useful information to lawmakers and the public to get legal recognition and not be viewed as perverts or deviates. The internet is a great medium. I would probably be living as a woman right now had I had access 40 yrs ago to the information (and options) available today.	11/21/2006

The issue itself is complex and ever changing. My wife is understanding but still is somewhat uncomfortable with it. I don't push the issue. Girlfriends and wives should try and find a support group of their own to chat and learn to understand the topic just as many of us TGirls have support groups for support. I am one day closer to becoming a whole person, all the time. Past experience dealing with my inner feelings used to leave me feeling distraught, as if I were "half a person----all the time". I now know that this is never going away, and I now know that most of the public will react according to how YOU act. If you are strong-willed and a happy person, they too see that. However, if you cower, they see that as a weakness and they take advantage of that in order to empower themselves. Never give up YOUR power, especially to those who don't deserve it. Be proud and the world will follow!

My Wife supports some Dress-up-and-Play but is worried that I'll want to become a woman. I believe that if I could snap my fingers and become female, I would still prefer romance with a female or TG female.	4/12/2007
I feel that I am past the age when I will ever be able to come-out, as I really would like to be a young attractive woman, not an old lady.

It's me. I've been a woman all my life unfortunately born a man. I'm changing that. My children accept me and support me as does the man in my life. My life began to change with my orchidectomy for testicular cancer a few years soon than I had planned ... but I'm fine and my plan is fine.	6/7/2007
Participant #527
At this point it makes life very difficult. I wish I had known more about it when I was younger. Only after years of pain and a lot of research over the internet have I begun to understand. For years I thought I was the only one or at least one of very few. Now that I know better I still find it hard to reach out to someone else. A word of advice to the younger individuals, enjoy yourself and don't be afraid to be who you really are. Life is too short and you can't go back.	6/8/2007
